Sketches of Little OLD NEW YORK by Q. M. McIntyre

Telegram Bureau: Rooms 121-125 Hotel Majestic, West seventy-second Street.

NEW YORK, March 24.—Leonard Anderson is one of those slickers from Chicago who just adores his profession of detecting. He came back the other day after a year's visit to relatives in Norway and he just chuckled all the way over the boat over how he was going to fool all the crooks in Gotham.

While in Norway he did as the Norwegians sometimes do and raised a crop of whiskers which afforded him a disguise that would not result in some crook shouting "Take 'em off 'em, we know you." He was aching to get to work behind his King Lear's and took a room at a cheap hotel near the steamship piers. He donned an immigrant's cap and started joyously to Sherlock Holmes around.

Two affable strangers fell into conversation with him. He could hardly keep a straight face it was that ludicrous. In answer to their sympathetic and interested questioning, he informed them that he had a roll of $166 in his pocket. It was a delicious situation indeed and he felt it was a big joke.

That is he felt it for a second or so and then somehow someone turned off the sunshine and he didn't feel anything because one of the affable strangers affably tapped him on the bean with a restless blackjack and the other removed the money and verified the amount.

Anderson identified himself with little trouble at the hospital, promptly visited a barber and took the first train in the direction of Chicago.

Anyway Francisco Villa is the first Broadway actor that ever had the United States declare war on him and hunt him down with an army. Many will admit Villa is a bad actor but few know him as a Broadway actor.

It happens that Villa acted in films that were shown in all the Broadway movie houses and that makes him a Broadway actor just as much as the stars who are posing in Los Angeles are Broadway stars.

The photoplay has changed the status of acting. A man can pose 3,000 miles away and still be acting in Times Square. That's Villa. He signed a contract to fight all his anti-Huerta battles in the day time and under favorable camera conditions. All the bulb hounds are there to snap him from morning until night—or rather they were there.

William Thaw, the young Pittsburgh millionaire, who circled around New York last week and finally landed with a thud on the west drive of Central Park, was being praised after a luncheon party at the Waldorf.

"Mr. Thaw," said a pretty girl, "is as brave as he is witty. I saw him make the splendid flight over Central Park and after his descent I said to him: 'Flying requires some special application, doesn't it?'"

"Oh, no," said he, "any old kind of horse liniment will do!"

Louis H. Chalf, the dancer, was in a Fifth avenue church last Sunday when a man drifted in as the congregation was reciting with the vicar: "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done and we have done those things which we ought not to have done."

The stranger settled down into the pew beside Mr. Chalf with a sigh of relief on hearing the words. "Thank goodness," he said, "I've found my crowd at last."

Already it has become difficult to get seats for the Moran-Willard fight. New York hasn't had an event like it in years and the speculators will reap a harvest. The police will rope off several blocks on each side of Madison Square Garden to keep back those who think they can get their seats at the very last moment.

Society is getting ready to attend the bout en masse. It is predicted that most of the spectators will be in evening clothes.

THE BODY IS A HUMAN DRYDOCK

A Storehouse for Diseases That Wreck the System and Cause Misery.

The human body unless given careful attention will contract all sorts of diseases that wear down the organs and cause sickness. Mr. Edgar Chopler, of Shadyside, just across the river from Wheeling, said in regard to this: "I had liver trouble and contracted a deep cold several weeks ago. I ached all over and felt sore in my throat and chest. My liver was inactive and my kidneys gave me considerable trouble. My nerves were so bad that I could not sleep. But since taking Tanlac my liver is alright and my cold disappeared before I knew it. My kidney trouble is gone and I enjoy a fine appetite. I sleep and feel refreshed in the morning. I am glad I found this good medicine as it has done me a world of good and I feel that I should let other people know of this great remedy and hope my statement will help someone."

Will it help you? Tanlac is sold by Farrell's Drug Store. $1 per bottle.—Advertisement.
